Pellegrino Riccardi

For the past 30 years, Pellegrino Riccardi has travelled the globe helping people interact more effectively with one another, especially those who work in a multi-cultural environment.

Pellegrino was born in the UK in an Italian family, and has lived in Norway for the past 21 years. His multicultural background, along with his first-hand cross-cultural work experience over the last three decades has given Pellegrino a solid basis from which to provide his audiences with practical tools and insights into what makes people tick and how to get the best performance out of them.

Pellegrino is widely recognised as being one of Scandinavia's top cross-cultural experts. His clients include a diverse range of international organisations, including banking and finance, oil and gas, shipping, government and public sector.

Pellegrino explores how to build corporate cultures, how to create vibrant work environments, how to get the best out of yourself and others around you, as well as other human-interaction fields such as how to create unforgettable customer experiences, sales and negotiations.

The son of an immigrant and an immigrant himself, Pellegrino has recently become more and more involved in the pressing issues of immigration and refugees, helping people deal better with the influx of diverse and often conflicting cultural values.
