Jordan Casey is one of the world's youngest serial entrepreneurs.

Casey became well known when he became one of Europe's youngest iOS app developers by releasing a mobile game onto the iTunes store. The game called Alien Ball Vs Humans subsequently went to No 1 on iTunes.

Casey began programming at the age of nine through watching YouTube videos, the internet and reading books on programming. In 2012, he founded 2 companies, Casey Games, a mobile games company, and TeachWare, an application for teachers to easily manage all of their student's information in the cloud. The company won 2 business awards and was nominated for a BAFTA. He announced his application Eventzy at the Web summit in Dublin in 2014.

Casey is currently working on a project called KidsCode which is an online application that inspires children to program with their friends, as well as a social network called Jump. He is also an advisory member for Mind Candy – the company behind the hugely successful Moshi Monsters. He has also worked with the European Commission on projects encouraging youth entrepreneurship.
