In October 2016, Michele spoke at the TEDWomen Conference in San Francisco where she shared her personal story and how she coped and handled with the condition that she was born with. She believes that it is important that a person should ask for help and should be given assistance and the opportunity, but it is also equally important that person have to move along with the opportunity given in order to be successful. She believes everyone can achieve what they dream or aspire to be, regardless of the conditions they're born in.

Michele had spent 30 years at Caterpillar and she was appointed the President of the Caterpillar Foundation in 2011. She is the first female President of the foundation, since it's founding in 1952. During her tenure as President, she shifted Caterpillar's philanthropy efforts from being a transactional to being global and strategic, that focuses on Corporate Social Innovation. Under Michele's leadership, the Foundation has also begun to focus on policy work as Michele and her team believe sustainable changes in policy are necessary to making real change happen. The Caterpillar Foundation has changed from being operational to being influential and a thought leader under Michele's guidance.

She is also a board member of ONE Campaign, an organization that advocates and campaigns to end extreme poverty and preventable diseases, particularly in Africa. ONE is co-founded by Bono, the lead singer of the band U2.
